II. Determination of Personnel Performing Essential and Non-Essential Services during the Outbreak

Every agency shall continue to implement and refine as necessary determinations concerning which services it provides that are essential during the COVID-19 outbreak, consistent with the agency’s written Restart/Safety Plan outlining how it will reduce the risk of spread of COVID-19 in the workplace developed in accordance with “Managing the Return to the Office in the Age of COVID-19,” issued by DCAS on August 11, 2020.

A. Essential services are defined as follows in the order of importance:

1. Responding to the COVID-19 Emergency

Delivery of any service or function that is critical to the mitigation of the spread of COVID-19 and emergencies arising because of the outbreak or actions taken to mitigate the outbreak.

III. Work Assignments During the COVID-19 Emergency

A. Employees Currently Performing Non-Essential Services

Employees who currently are not assigned to perform essential services, as defined in Part II of this guidance are designated “employees currently performing non-essential services.” Administrative and clerical office-based employees are presumptively performing non-essential services. If their presence at the worksite is necessary for the performance of an essential service, they may be designated by the Agency as an employee providing essential service. For example, an administrative employee who performs a task for an essential service that cannot be made accessible to the employee’s home, may be designated as an employee currently providing essential service.

As agencies plan return to the office, they should continue to allow employees who perform non-essential services to telework whenever possible. Agencies may require employees who perform non-essential services to return to the office as part of its Restart/Safety Plan. When determining which employees should return to the office, agencies should give priority to restoring essential services and other important services or functions that have been suspended during the emergency because they cannot be performed remotely.

All personnel who continue to work remotely are required to complete all work assignments which they are assigned by the Agency and which they have the technological capacity to perform at home using personal equipment or equipment provided by the agency (e.g., computer, phone, internet access).

Those employees may also be re-assigned to perform essential services within their agencies or by the City in other agencies at a location other than at their home including, but not limited to, at emergency services administered by the Department of Education, food services sites, and nursing care sites for vulnerable students, as circumstances require.

Designation of an employee as performing non-essential services is temporary and may change to essential as the COVID-19 pandemic evolves. An employee who refuses to perform assigned work or to obtain equipment provided by the Agency to perform assigned work shall be charged accrued leave and may be subject to discipline. Agencies must make and document all diligent efforts to identify work that can be performed remotely by an employee designated as performing non-essential services. An employee designated as currently performing non-essential services who in the rare circumstance is unable to work remotely because of inadequate equipment or lack of assignment shall be granted excused leave with pay without charge to leave accruals.

B. Employees Currently Performing Essential Services

1. Employees currently performing essential services are required to work at home or other alternate location if the agency has determined that is feasible pursuant to the agency's telework plan implemented in accordance with Personnel Service Bulletin 600-3 (Temporary Citywide Telework Policy for City Employees During the COVID-19 Outbreak), dated March 13, 2020.
2. Employees currently performing essential services at home or other alternate location must ensure that they have the necessary functioning equipment to perform his or her duties. If an employee experiences a service outage (such as equipment failure or loss of power or internet connectivity), the Agency may, at its discretion, assign the employee to the office until the outage is resolved.
3. Employees who are unable to perform essential services at home, for example field workers, must continue to work at the locations to which their agencies have assigned them.
 - a. If an employee is exhibiting symptoms of COVID-19, the agency should instruct the employee to go home. Before instructing an employee to go home under this circumstance, the employee's supervisor or manager must notify the agency's human resources department.
